ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Computer programs are analysed for the occurrence of redundant program instructions of program instruction using uninitialised variables. If the number of such 5   instructions exceeds a threshold level, then the computer program is treated as containing a computer virus. This technique is useful in identifying new and polymorphic viruses.

[Fig. 6]